AGA Announces Winners of 2022 Government Finance Case Challenge

(Alexandria, Va.) Teams from three universities received top honors in AGA's 2022 Government Case Challenge. A team from the University of Kentucky won the graduate division competition, while teams from Auburn University and Cameron University tied for first place in the undergraduate division.

In the annual competition, AGA invites teams of currently enrolled graduate and undergraduate students to study government operations in one target state or locality and produce a four-page Citizen-Centric Report (CCR) on specific areas of interest to their taxpayers. This year's challenge highlighted the City of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Team submissions are judged by a panel of government finance experts, and finalists are invited to present their findings in a team-created video of a mock government meeting. Members of each winning team and their faculty advisor each receive a $1,000 scholarship award.
