AGA Selects 15 Students to Attend the 2023 National Leadership Training

Alexandria, Va. – AGA is proud to announce 15 student recipients of the 2023 National Collegiate Leadership Scholarship. The scholarships cover registration, airfare, and hotel costs to attend AGA’s National Leadership Training in Washington, D.C., February 22–23.

The undergraduates, selected for demonstrated leadership experience and superior academic performance, include: Elise Toland, Bradley University; Chelsea Lazenby and Natalie Martin, Cameron University; Richea Haygood, Ryan Jones and Brice Dean, Harris-Stowe State University; Anna Callender, and Joseph Bailey Smith, Mississippi College; Lucy Petet, Missouri State University; An Le and Kirstin Westlake, University of Central Oklahoma; Christian Chlebowski, University of Connecticut; Blair Lozier, University of Kentucky; Caleb Alvarez-Sierra, University of Maryland Global Campus; and Georgeann McLemore, University of Missouri – St. Louis.

Since 2015, over 75 students have received National Collegiate Leadership Scholarship. Each recipient is chosen among applicants from across the country to enjoy a unique opportunity to network and learn from leaders who are passionate about public service and advancing government accountability. Recipients are assigned mentors to guide them one-on-one throughout the event. The exposure to senior government leaders allows students to discover more about government careers first-hand.

Applicants must be undergraduate students, either juniors or seniors, who are majoring in accounting, finance, information security or IT, business or other related fields, with a minimum 3.2 GPA. Learn more about AGA’s National Collegiate Leadership Program here.
